ARE YOU THE RIGHT PERSON?

The Nicotine and Cannabis Policy Center (NCPC) is offering invaluable work experience via a hands-on internship. Those accepted will work directly with local public health departments throughout the San Joaquin Valley, so applicants must be self-motivated and professional. We are currently seeking undergraduate students eager to make an impact on local community tobacco/nicotine policies via effective research projects within the San Joaquin Valley.

Every participant will have the opportunity to:

- Network with potential future employers
- Help improve the quality of lives of local residents
- Gain Course Credit
- Learn about tobacco-related theory, research, and policy control efforts

APPLICATIONS DUE FRIDAY, MARCH 28TH at 5pm

How to apply: All UCM undergraduate students are eligible to apply. Please submit your unofficial transcript, an up-to-date resume, and a 650 word maximum personal statement that goes over the following 4 points:

- How would you use science to promote social justice in society?
- What sparked your interests in health and tobacco control?
- What are you looking to accomplish in this program?
- What research project or research-related course have you previously participated in? Please give specific details about your experience.
